Description

"One can further view the exhibition [The Middle Pillar, at Maccarone] in its entirety in relation to Bove's previous practice specifically, as if the gallery structure is a bookshelf piece that has been magnified. Additional concrete slabs scattered throughout the space, some installed upright, others on the ground or affixed to the gallery walls, each retain their own unique materiality. At first glance, they are basic, neutral surfaces; up close emerge imprints of the wood shells from which the objects were cast. The stains, shadows and faint silhouettes of grain achieve a quality of delicacy and femininity in an otherwise hard, concrete structure."
