Natural dyes and hand-stitching on found cotton tea towel

Description
Harlem Renaissance poet Countee Cullen's "Incident" (1925) describes the deep and lasting wounds racial slurs can leave on a person. In this poignant image, Hampton stitched the text of the poem across a hand-painted silhouette of her father as an infant. The text and images are imposed on a found tea towel that had been embroidered with "pickaninnies," long in use in this country as the pejorative caricature of African American children.
